Dear Libro team,

I read with great interest and enthusiasm your announcement on an open position for a Creative Project Manager. Your commitment to sustainable innovation and a culture focused on people, especially children, is very much aligned with my professional and personal philosophy.

As father of two children aged 5 and 8, I share your conviction that stories play an essential role in awakening curiosity, imagination, and creativity. They are then crucial to build on children's personality and are also a vehicle to transmit concepts that can be, otherwise, difficult to address.

My experience at b<>com research foundation provided me with experience to work (as team lead) in multidisciplinary and multicultural teams on projects using cutting-edge technology for social impact and accessible to wide ranges of population. These experiences has allowed be to learn and improve my abilities to coordinate collaborative efforts in an agile and adaptive work environment, and also empowering colleagues through self-leadership.

I am familiar with project management and communication tools such as Trello, Asana, Monday, and Slack. Most recently, I had the privilege to design a platform for my organization (Digitalizers) using Notion.so, a no-code productivity tool. This platform makes it possible to manage our projects, planning, Kanban boards, communication and knowledge-management on a daily basis.

I have broad experience on the application of Agile project management methodologies like Scrum and Kanban, as well as innovation management strategies such as Design Sprint (certified in Advanced Facilitation) and Design Thinking. These approaches facilitate the application of design principles in problem-solving.

My fascination for creativity is not only on technology, it spans to various fields. Currently, my eight-year-old daughter and I are developing a pop-up store for her to sell hand-made jewellery to support Ukrainian children. We have established a jewelry brand and crafted our pieces using Fimo clay and wood. We're getting ready to make our first sales.

The mission of Libro to create lasting memories for children around the world is particularly inspiring for me. I am convinced that my solid background in project management and my passion for creating high-quality products will enable me to propose Libro's innovative projects that we can, together, make them come to life.

I would be honored to meet you and share my vision of how we can work together to achieve your goals. Thank you for considering my application and I look forward to discuss our future together.
